If you ask anyone what their favorite thing about South High School is, they will probably say "the diversity!" and I 100% agree. Now, it's talked about so much, that it isn't that impressive to people anymore, but as a student who walks down those hallways almost every day, it is beautiful to see so many different faces, hear so many accents, learn about so many cultures. Another thing I love about South is the teachers' involvement in present problems from our society, and how they transport that knowledge to us. For example, the day Mr. Marini threw away his lesson plan for the day and decided to teach about gun violence after the tragic Vegas shooting, or the day Mr. Shelke was so captivated by "13th", a documentary on mass incarceration and police brutality towards African-Americans, that he played it during class, while we worked. Teachers like that are the reason I will always be a proud South Rebel.

South High School is a unique opportunity for students in Denver, Colorado to learn about a multitude of different cultures throughout the world. With a diverse student population, South teaches individualism and acceptance in and out of the classroom. Despite the diversity, there are still fewer students of color in higher level classes than white students. But south students have started programs to ameliorate this issue. There are activities in the arts, sciences, and more to make sure everyone finds a place within the community. As a whole South High School seeks to improve the opportunities provided to the students and provide a safe environment in which to learn.

I've gone to South for four years, so I can speak to its quality. It's diversity is commendable, the array of AP courses is fantastic, and the clubs and activities scene is massive. Just one example of our diversity community is the fact that every year we have an assembly called "Culture Fest" wherein all students are able to express their cultures with performances of song, dance, poetry, etc. I have had the chance to take at least 1 AP class each year I've gone to South. It is encouraged to prepare for the future (college or no college) and take classes that challenge and push us to be our best and reach our potential. I have also been lucky enough to get to participate in a few of the dozens of clubs and activities South has. I've participated in Student Theater, Cross Country, and even Knitting Club! All have been fun and a eye opening. I highly recommend South to kids who want to widen their perspective, receive a good education, or to prepare for the future.

South High School is the district hub and safe place for all refugees and ELA students. We have students that represent 60 different countries and come here from all around the world. I am forever grateful for the cultures, languages and other students I have been introduced to at South. However, recently we are going through an administration change. This means that people that don't know anything about teaching are running the district. Our new principal is trying to gentrify the school in a way, starting by getting rid of the ELA and refugee students to make our school like our sister schools like East, which is a primarily white school. Many people, including myself are standing up to this change and demanding justice for all these wonderful students that deserve a chance at education and being treated fairly by our school and government.
