Community Reviews for this School

My time at DSST Stapleton was one of the most impactful times in my life. No matter what I would be going through, there was always a teacher that genuinely cared about me. The staff are incredible and work so hard everyday for their students. The school is small so you can really form great friendships through all the grades, and the clubs they do offer are a great way to meet new people and find passions. Although the academic rigor of the school does take a toll from time to time, the support you receive from the entire community more than compensated for that.

I liked DSST Stapleton for several reasons. First, the amount of support I got from my teachers and advisers for all four years I have been to the school has been tremendous. They are always open to helping me out and are very adept at finding my struggles and helping me to overcome said struggles. Second, the school is very inclusive and accepts people from all backgrounds not matter how far or foreign they are. While I am a white American, I see a lot of people who come from places such as Africa, South America, and many more places and cultures. Finally, the school really took the load when helping me get ready for college. In fact, I would say they did almost all the work needed to get me admitted and accepted to a college.

DSST is overall a good school. They have a rigorous academic program, but do lack some academic opportunities that a different school might give a student (i.e. dual enrollment classes, a variety of AP classes, arts courses). The admin and teachers are able to give students a very strong support system whether it be with their personal or academic lives. DSST does prepare most students to be college ready. As they claim, all students in the senior class do get accepted into a 4-year college/university. There is the caveat: their college counselors require that students apply to at least one "foundation" school that they know will accept said student to insure that their "100% acceptance" legacy holds true. Despite the fact that they are a STEM school, DSST has started to expand their clubs to be focused towards the arts as well.

I've been at this school since 6th grade. I honestly hated it at the start. All the way until 12th grade I can say I didn't enjoy it at all. I changed my mind in my 12th grade year for many reasons. One was that my mom would keep telling me stories about her friends kids and how they fight, and do drugs and ditch school. This made me feel grateful for DSST because they helped me make it this far. Another reason was that I realized that I wouldn't be as strong as I am today without DSST. I've cried, laughed, been disappointed, but in the end, all those feelings made me who I am today. I've grown immensely from DSST. Lastly, I can say that the level of support at DSST could never be any stronger and that support was the two pair of hands that pushed me to continue to go through and make it. I did not like DSST at first, but this school is an important part of my life, and I'll always be thankful for it.

they do a great job with academics particularly Junior and Senior year. They have gotten better with IEPs/504s over the last 2 years. They need to have more teachers' aides as the teachers often get behind in grading due to the heavy load, but most of the teachers really care about the students. The building is older and as the student population is growing, it doesn't have enough room in the cafeteria and other places can get cramped. Sports are available, but lack of coaches accountability is a big issue when it comes to the athletes well being both physically and emotionally.
