Englewood was an alright school, they had activities but nothing to really excel in. So many kids were bad so the teachers had to focus on those kids more than the good students which is always hard. I was very involved in high school and thankfully this school was actually able to work with the fact we would be going to meets, competitions ect. And our grades were never effected by that!

It was decent, about the same you'd expect from any other high school, but relatively small. I had both good and bad experiences with all the teachers, with some being there for me always and some seemingly deliberately going out to spite, antagonize, and demean me. The food was awful. It was to a point where the school was on the news for such poor health standards. Other than that, the actual facility was great, the students around me were what you'd expect from a normal high school, and everything else seemed to persist itself as nothing more than average.

I like how their lot of offers to get a head start in a field of study once you get into college. A thing I didn't like about is the general additude of the students disrespecting the new campus that is better than most schools. This additude also appears in academic performances that it doesn't matter that much, so one shouldn't have to put the effort into school. Even though going to school, getting an education could be one of the most important things in life.

Many teachers at this school care about their students, but there are a lot of teachers whom just do not care at all anymore. We have a class that just sits on their phones because the teacher didn't come up with a lesson plan that day. Also, their knowledge on certain questions isn't very applicable to the class either. As a student, you as your teacher a question and expect an answer, not for them to tell you to "google it." Since majority of the teachers have the best interest of students at heart, it is easier to go to different teachers through out the school to get help. For example, I could see my Advocacy teacher to help me with English instead of seeing my actual teacher. Communication depends on the teacher. Different teachers use different portals to push out and collect our school work. Consistency in grading is a huge problem at this school, a single test failed can bring a grade from an A to a D, even if you completed all the homework assignments and projects. Yet, the next test even if failed could bring your grade up from a D to a B-.
